

Job sites go green to please workers

2007-11-29

A growing number of employers are going green, putting greater emphasis on reducing their impact on the environment.

The issue is important to many employees. Thirty-three percent of employees would be more inclined to work for a company that is environmentally conscious, according to a survey this year by Adecco, a Melville, N.Y.-based provider of workforce solutions. More than half of the respondents thought their company should be doing more.
